Mokena Youth Killed Playing With Gun

Shortly after Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Warning of Mokena left home last Saturday night to attend a social affair in the public school across the street from their home, tragedy struck.

Their son Lee, 12 years old and his cousin, Norma Embling, 10 years old of New Lenox, were left alone at the Warning home. The youngsters decided to play cards. Lee went to his parent's bedroom to get a deck of cards. While looking for the cards Lee found a tin box containing an automatic pistol. The box was locked, but the key was underneath the box. Lee unlocked the box, took the gun out and showed it to his cousin. When she showed signs of fright he pointed the gun toward the floor and pulled the trigger, but there was only the sound of a click.

Turning to his cousin he said, "See, it won't hurt you". Then he pointed the gun toward his head and pulled the trigger again. There was a sudden roar as the gun went off. Lee dropped to the floor. The girl terrified, ran over to the school house and told Mr. Warning. Lee had shot himself. The father hurried home followed by the mother and Mayor Harry F. Mall. Dr. E. G. McMahon of Mokena was called and the unconscious youth was rushed to Silver Cross hospital in Joliet where he passed away early Sunday morning, never regaining consciousness.

Examination revealed that the bullet had entered the head at the temple and came out the back of the head near the base of the brain. A small mark was found on the ceiling over the bed where the bullet was believed to have hit after passing thru the boy's head. All the force had been spent, however, and the bullet had dropped to the floor.

Mr. Warning said that when he last examined the gun, a 25 caliber automatic, the clip was fully loaded but the clip was not in the gun. The chamber of the gun was empty. How the lone fatal shot got into the gun is not known.

A coroner's inquest was held Monday afternoon at the Cooper and Hostert garage in Mokena with Coroner E. A. Kingston of Joliet in charge. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

Surviving are the parents, the grand parents, Mrs. Emma Schmidt of Mokena and Mr. and Mrs. John Warning of New Lenox.

Lee Warning was born December 29, 1931 and resided in Mokena all his life. He attended the Mokena public school, was a member of the Mokena School band, of the Boy Scouts and of the local basketball team. He attended St. John's Evangelical Sunday school and was an exemplary young boy.

The funeral services were held from the late home to the St. John Evangelical church Tuesday afternoon and attended by hundreds of mourners. Lee was a popular boy in school and the school children sang at the funeral services while members of the Boy Scouts acted as pall bearers. Rev. Wm. Riemann of St. John's church conducted the services. The floral tributes were very beautiful and very profuse. Burial was made in the St. John cemetery.

CHILD HURT WHEN SHE FALLS FROM MOVING CAR DUE TO CAR DOOR OPENING

As Mr. Kenneth Brown was returning to his farm home a week ago Monday afternoon he stopped at the Cleveland school to pick up his daughter Donna. Mr. Brown had been in Mokena and was using the Schiek Dairy milk truck, and as they were driving east from the school, the door of the truck flew open on Donna's side and she fell out landed on her head on the shoulder of the road.

Mr. Brown immediately took her to the office of Dr. McMahon in Mokena and from there to Silver Cross hospital where x-rays were taken and revealed a fractured skull.

Donna who is six years old, has been confined to bed since, and must remain there for two more weeks. She is suffering much pain.

Explains Duties of Price Panel Assistant

Stanley J. Simpson, chief clerk of the Will County Ration Board at Joliet appeared before the Mokena Civic Association Tuesday evening and in a lucid and comprehensive manner outlined the need and duties of local assistants to the price panel board of the ration board. He made it clear that these assistants engaged in a campaign of education and assist the merchants in the county in a better understanding of the regulations and impart information which the merchants some times do not have. He further showed that the price panel board is designed to prevent inflation of various commodities and to maintain a ceiling price. Mr. Simpson pointed out that in a recent survey of the merchants of the county it was discovered that many of the merchants did not comply with all regulations, due chiefly to lack of knowledge of various regulations.

Mr. Simpson showed that if the price of sugar were raised 1c a pound the total increase of the price of sugar to the consumer would be more than the entire cost of operation of the OPA. He made it very plain that price panel assistants are not snoopers nor investigators, but are designed to be of help to both merchant and consumer by seeing that OPA prices are listed and understood and inflationary measures are nipped.

Mr. Simpson had been invited to address the civic group and clarify some points to them after they had gone on record as being opposed to local price panel board assistants on the ground that this savored of "Snooping". N. F. Heiman, at the close of Mr. Simpson's talk said the Civic Association had been misinformed about the functions of price panel assistants and Mayor Harry F. Mall agreed to appoint an assistant for Mokena soon as he could find someone willing to take up the job.

She was rushed to the Little Company of Mary hospital, Evergreen Park for treatment.

WILL CO. FARM ADVISER RESIGNS AFTER 16 YEARS SERVICE

Leonard W. Braham, after over 16 years as Farm Adviser for the Will County Farm Bureau, resigned his position in order to accept a new post of General Manager for the Will County Co-operatives. This announcement came from H. J. Schroeder, President of the Will County Farm Bureau and also of the Will County Co-operatives, since both organizations are directed by practically the same group of men. Mr. Braham came to Will County on January 1, 1928 to succeed J. Franklin Hedgecock, who had been Farm Adviser here since 1920.

Developments leading up to this change have taken place over a considerable period of time. The immediate need for a change at this time came because of the necessity of putting someone in charge of the expanding cold storage locker business that has been developed in the Will County Co-operatives. This co-operative organization has also taken over the seed service that some years ago was carried as a service feature of the Farm Bureau program as was the use of the seed cleaning and treating machine.

Under its charter the Will County Co-operatives can function to meet practically all the needs of organized farmers.

During the past 16 years the Will County Farm Bureau has increased in all of its departments. Its membership has grown from 500 to 2000.

During this same period, the Farm Bureau has purchased the old Terminal Building in Joliet, in which it had rented offices previously, and has now provided office space for the Farm Bureau and its subsidiaries and also all associated farm organizations including the Will County Home Bureau, the Will County Agricultural Conservation Association, the Joliet Local Pure Milk Association, the Will County National Farm Loan Association, the Joliet Production Credit Association, the Tri-Cities Dairy Council, the Joliet Farm Management Service, and other locker plant. Substantial rental income has been secured from commercial sources, which has made this building pay its own way and retire its first mortgage to well under $9,000. The financial position of the Will County Farm Bureau at the present time was never in better condition. The net worth at the present time stands at $36,445, compared with $4,579, on January 1, 1928.

MISCREANTS DAMAGE TOMBSTONES IN ST. JOHN CEMETERY, MOKENA

We have heard of kicking a man when he is down but the height of meanness is reached when hoodlums express their cussedness in desecrating the graves of the dead.

Such acts of vandalism were committed on St. John's cemetery in Mokena recently. Many old and new markers were pulled down, broken and irreparably damaged. Flower vases were smashed against the stones.

Clues to the identity of the offenders indicate that they were not irresponsible small children but were young men who should have reached the age of common sense. These clues are likely to lead to their identity. Their arrest for this vandalism will lead to heavy fines and imprisonment unless leniency is given.

GIVE REASON OF SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN TO POWER OF THE PRESS

The Burgess Knoch Joslyn Sonntag team for Delegates and Alternates to the Republican National Convention was apparently successful, due largely to the excellent cooperation given us by your paper in your news columns.

The power of the press to influence people to take an interest in their government is unexcelled by any other medium. Living as we do in the Eleventh District, it gives us a great deal of pride to realize that we have in this district such a publication as yours.

About the middle of May we will run in some form or other a straw vote throughout the Eleventh District to try and ascertain the choice of the people of the Eleventh District as to a Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidate and some of their ideas as to what the Republican platform should be, so that we may be guided by this opinion when we represent the Eleventh District at the convention.

We don't think any of the candidates for office ever had the cooperation that was given to us by the newspapers and publications of the Eleventh District and we again thank you for it.

HOLD FINAL VICTORY GARDEN COURSE

Thursday evening the final meeting of the Federally sponsored War Production Victory Garden course was held in the Tinley Park school. There were five meetings altogether and diplomas were presented to all those who attended each meeting. The guest speaker of the evening was Dr. W. L. Schmeckebier of Matteson who spoke on Flower Culture and showed some excellent colored slides on the subject. In addition a summary was given of the entire course which was followed by a discussion by the entire group. Further soil samples were tested and the topic of pruning of trees and shrubs was discussed.

The course has proved of great benefit to all attending, and feel it was a privilege to have a course of this kind given in Tinley Park.

BARN DANCE COMING

JOB TO DO IN LONDON

Those close to Secretary of State Hull say he is not happy over the mission to London undertaken by energetic young Undersecretary Ed Stettinius. Originally, the trip was planned partly to please the British, who hinted that we had sent no important emissaries to London since Harry Hopkins' call on Churchill two years ago.

However, Stettinius is on the way to turning the mission into something really important. He is scheduled to discuss five important subjects with the British. They are:

1. Stabilization of the dollar and pound after the war.
2. A world bank.
3. Stabilization of commodities. This would mean the application of Wallace's ever-normal granary to all basic commodities such as tin, rubber, copper, sugar, with a system of buying and selling to keep prices stabilized.

4. Oil and the Near East. The United States wants to avoid a cut-throat battle for oil such as occurred with Britain after the last war and which is already threatened as a result of the Arabian pipe-line wrangling.

5. The future boundaries of Germany.

German boundaries were tentatively discussed at Teheran, but now Dr. Isalah Bowman, famed geographer, has accompanied Stettinius to London to talk details. Bowman was Woodrow Wilson's geographic expert at Versailles, and some officials are critical of his chopping-up of Europe.

This imposing agenda has irked Secretary Hull. Apparently, it was pretty well arranged while he was in Florida. Also, Hull was always jealous of the trips Sumner Welles took to Rio, Rome, London and Berlin, and now it looks as if his new undersecretary might also be crowding him for the limelight.

MORE HORSE LEATHER

Representative Calvin Johnson of Illinois has been badgering the war department and the War Production board to get more harness for farm horses. With leather short, and harness buckle metal diverted to war production, harness is scarce. Also, the army has bought up tremendous supplies of harness.

In campaigning for more harness, Representative Johnson suddenly bumped into the fact that the army was only just now releasing from its Jeffersonville, Ind., quartermaster depot a total of 30,000 sets of harness — carefully stored away since the last war.

FREE RADIO TIME

Broadcasters are wondering how many other congressmen will follow the example recently set by Maryland's Senator Millard Tydings. At the close of his regular weekly broadcast, he announced that he would discontinue the series because he did not wish to subject the radio station, WBAL, to charges of unfairness during the coming senatorial campaign.

OIL SUBSIDY

The OPA has now recommended a system of oil subsidies to Economic Stabilizer Vinson ranging from 25 cents to 75 cents a barrel for all low-producing wells, namely those oil wells averaging nine barrels per day or less. This would give a subsidy to about 80 per cent of the nation's wells and would cost the government about $60,000,000 a year.

The plan was secretly worked out by some of the independents but, when the big companies heard about it, they raised such a howl that the little fellows backed out, stating publicly that they had not been cooperating with the government in devising the subsidy scheme.

However, it looks as if the plan would go through. Pennsylvania wells, which are the deepest, will get the highest subsidy.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

☐ The United States is cutting off its nose to spite its face in regard to De Gaulle and the Free French. We are still freezing French funds in order to hamstring De Gaulle, which means that we will have to dig down into our own U. S. treasury to pay France's share of the UNRRA fund. Each nation is supposed to contribute a share to this world relief fund, and since we are tying up French funds, we will have to find the money some place.

☐ In Recife, thousands of cheering Brazilians welcomed Mrs. Roosevelt by singing "God Bless America" in Portuguese.

☐ A conspiracy is on to euhre another sizable hunk of the manpower problem out from under Paul McNutt. Undersecretary of War Patterson, rubber czar Bradley Dewey and WPB's production wizard, Charles E. Wilson, want to take the deferment of skilled industrial workers away from McNutt and put it under a special committee headed by Wilson.

☐ Reason for sparse publicity on the First Lady's Latin-American tour was the war department's refusal to let the newsmen who usually cover Mrs. Roosevelt go along.

Campaign to Gain Coast Air Bases to Bomb Tokyo

Tokyo by way of the south China coast—that seems to be the major strategy. Figuring in the China coast campaign are, as the map shows, (1) Formosa, which has been having invasion jitters, (2) the Philippines, towards which a swift drive appears to be directed, (3) Hainan, often bombed recently, and (4) the center of the battle for China's lifeline.

Recommends 4-Fs for War Work

Appearing before a house military affairs committee, Undersecretary of War Robert H. Patterson recommended that 4-Fs not engaged in essential war work be inducted into the army enlisted reserve for assignment to civilian jobs. Photo shows, left, Ralph A. PAUL BECOMES A MISSIONARY

LESSON TEXT: Acts 13:1-4; 14:8-20.
GOLDEN TEXT: The Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.—Acts 13:2.

Men are God's instruments for accomplishing His purpose in spreading the gospel message. They must, for such a high and holy calling, be men called and prepared by Him, faithful to Him, and willing to sacrifice all for His glory. Paul is a great example of such a life. He was—

I. Separated by the Church (13:1-3).

God was about to begin the great missionary enterprise, which opened with the journeys of Paul and continues to this day. The church at Antioch had capable men in its membership, and the Holy Spirit called for the separation of two of these, Paul and Barnabas, for a special work.

A number of interesting things emerge here. It is good to note that the church had men trained and ready for service. Do we?

Observe that the Holy Spirit worked through the church. There are those who do not speak too highly of the place of the church in this matter. Certainly it is true that if the church has lost its vision and message, God may call men even outside of its membership. But the orderly way—and God's way, if the church is ready—is to have the church separate men for service.

The church at Antioch gave its best, without question and without hesitation. It is an example worthy of our emulation.

II. Sent by the Holy Spirit (13:4).

There is a sense in which the Holy Spirit functions as the executive member of the Trinity. His purpose is to magnify the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to bring men to faith in Him. To carry out that plan, He sends men out to speak of Jesus.

The sent one is always successful, for he goes the way, at the time, and in the power of the Holy Spirit. To be sent by Him is the mark of distinction upon the Christian worker.

III. Serving by Deed and Word (14:8-18).

The story of the healing of the man who had been a cripple from birth centers around that beautiful word "faith."

God is always looking for faith in men and women, and so we who serve Him should learn to be alert for even the slightest indication of a belief in Christ. All too often we blunder along, a bit too eager for action, or too insistent upon a thing being done in just our way, and thus fail to see the gleam of faith to which we may address the gospel appeal.

"Seeing that he had faith" (v. 9), Paul turned all the power of the eternal God loose in the impotent feet of the man, "and he leaped up and walked." God help us to be ready to be channels for the outflowing of His power!

Impressed by the miracle, the people wanted to accord the disciples the worship of gods. One is impressed both by the promptness with which Paul and Barnabas stopped the demonstration and the skill with which they improved the occasion for a testimony for Christ!

The servants of Christ are in far greater danger when men speak well of them and would worship them, than they are in the hour of opposition and persecution. Not that anyone would suggest that a true word of appreciation or honor be withheld from a faithful teacher or preacher, but let it be given for God's glory and not for the praise of man.

IV. Suffering for Christ's Sake (14:19, 20).

The highest praise quickly turns to the most bitter hatred. Finding that they had foolishly attempted to defy two Jewish preachers, and being visited by the Jews who made it their business to pursue Paul to this city, they stoned him.

Incidentally, it is of interest to observe how zealous people can be for an evil cause. Having set out to hinder the gospel they were willing, yes eager, to spend time and money to carry out their purpose. The children of Satan are often more diligent than the children of light (cf. Luke 16:8).

Paul was left for dead; in fact, there are those who believe that he was dead, and that it was at this time he was caught up into the heavens and had the vision spoken of in II Corinthians 12:1-4. If that was the case, the raising of Paul was an actual resurrection from the dead.

For a man so stoned as to be left for dead, to arise and journey on the following day to another city, was a miracle of God's power.

In this case, God delivered His servant, not from his troubles, but through them. We must not always expect to be saved from trial, but we can be sure that God will deliver us either "out of" or "in" our troubles. Let us trust Him!

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder.

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Lieut. Col. Frank Kurtz, Flying Fortress pilot, tells of that fatal day when the Japs struck in the Philippines. Eight of his men were killed fleeing for shelter and Old 99 was demolished before it could get off the ground. After escaping to Australia, what is left of the squadron flies to Java, where they go out on missions over the Philippines. On one of these missions one of the motors of Kurtz' Fort is hit and they begin to lose altitude. They stay with it, however, make the bomb run and try to make Malang Field on Java, but change their minds, turn back. The boys are wrought up at a U. S. magazine which publishes a complete diagram of the E model Fortress.

CHAPTER XI

"Pilot to Radio," calls Captain Skiles over the interphones. "Radio answering Pilot. Go ahead," answers Sergeant Boudria. "Get the emergency rations out," says Skiles, "and the jungle kits, and set them by the door."

"They'd given us up at Belem, but when they heard us circling up in the fog they went down the field in a truck, throwing out lighted flare pots to mark the runway. Our gas was so low that before the ship was parked the No. 1 engine cut out.

"Next morning we were off for Natal, and landed there at one o'clock. We were gassing up and the crew chief was supervising the loading—the natives rolling out the steel drums, and the crew chief unscrewing their tops to hurry it up—when he happened to stick his finger into one that seemed a little heavy and, by George, it was full of water! The barrel looked like any other barrel, the native looked like any other native. Of course it was sabotage, but what could you do! Brazil wasn't in the war yet. Somebody hoped that one drum of water would have brought us down with sputtering motors out in the Atlantic.

"We took off for Freetown, Africa, at ten o'clock. It was an eleven-hour flight. We stayed with the British there and got along with them fine. It was a fighter station. They gave us a nice feed and all the warm beer we could drink—it was New Year's Eve.

"Then we started across Africa, and finally sighted the Nile, and I ate dinner at the British sergeants' mess at Khartoum.

"When we got to Iraq," said the Gunner, "we began to smell the war. The British there told us not long ago the natives, led by Nazis, had revolted, and two thousand rebels had tried to take the field away from the little garrison. All the British had on it was one plane, so old it looked like a box kite—crushed about seventy miles per hour.

"So they'd taken an empty gas drum, loaded it up with brace chains, rivets, and bolts, and in the middle put a hell of a lot of sticks of dynamite and a fuse. It was so big it would hardly go into the door of the plane.

"Then they flew over the rebel army, and when they had figured the best place to drop it, they lit the fuse. But when they tried to roll it out, it got stuck in the door of the plane. The British said they were quite worried for a bit while that fuse burned on.

"Finally they jammed it through the door and on out, but it exploded about fifty feet off the ground. They said it killed about fifty rebels.

"A couple of hops later we were in Bangalore, in India, where there was a Welsh regiment stationed.

"Then we flew on down to Palembang, Sumatra, and crossed the equator in a hell of a snowstorm at 12,000 feet, with snow packing in between our engines.

"There we first saw the Dutch. Compared with the English, they seemed more rugged. But we liked them, even though they give you a loaf of bread, a hunk of baloney, and a cup of tea and call that breakfast, lunch, or dinner."

"On the seventeenth of January we had reached Java," continued the Gunner, "and were looking down on their rice paddies in a drizzle which washed everything a vivid green. Then we flew over Surabaya and up between those two conical mountains that guard the pass into Malang Field.

"Then we went down to barracks to meet the 19th. Well, there'd been quite a change. As a bunch they looked nervous and hollow-eyed, compared to the way we'd remembered them back in the States. Looked like a few of them had been drinking quite a bit off duty, maybe trying to forget what they'd been through. You had to stop and remember that those poor guys had been fighting a defensive war with those D's.

"They'd look enviously across the field at the tail guns of the new E's we'd arrived in. No doubt it was a lot better combat plane. 'Yeah-ah-uh,' they'd admit, 'but wait till a Jap gets on your tail and then see what happens.' They all looked so tired I wondered what I'd look like after a while.

"We found out they were sending us out on a raid the very next morning—which should show how badly they needed us—so after we came back I went out to check again on my guns."

"We needed the new boys badly," said Frank. "We'd got word trouble was on the way. You see the American Navy's PB's—big flying boats—had come out of Manila, and now were operating off Java, from the big Dutch naval base at Surabaya, but mostly from coastal coves and the wide mouths of rivers. Patrol Wing 10 they were called, and a swell gang they were. Of course we thought it was God-awful stuff they were flying—those clumsy twin-engined boats with the tail sweeping up in the air—but they certainly did a job.

"They came in with the news that on reconnaissance they'd picked up an enormous gang of Jap surface ships, coming toward us down Macassar Strait. It was the same gang we'd pounded at Davao. They had to be stopped. Had to be! So the Colonel sent out everything he had, which was just six Forts, and the Dutch sent their little Navy, which couldn't scare them much alone, plus some old Martin B-10 bombers they'd bought from us before the war."

"Take-off was at 3:30 in the morning," said the Gunner. "We'd planned to bomb from a good altitude, but the weather was so bad that we had to drop down to 15,000 as we approached the target. It broke light about seven and we began to see the gray, hazy sea, and the mountains piled up on both sides of the Strait below us.

"We were about ten miles from the target when we saw that Jap surface gang. I'm not a Navy man, but I was knocked over by it. They were strung out in two lines, trans-

Zeros are sitting under a cloud when we come by. Four of them go in for tail attacks and are shot into confetti, so the fifth is smart—he goes home with the news. But for a while there it was a tail-gunner's heaven."

"You never forget your first battle mission," said the Bombardier, "only I of course had a bomb-sight angle on the whole picture."

"Just before we took off Major Robinson called all pilots, bombardiers, radiomen, and navigators into the hangar room for a critique. He had a new idea.

"My plane is to be in his flight. When we make our pass over the target, my navigator is to watch Robinson's bomb doors, and when Robinson's bombs appear, then he releases four of mine. I mean while sighting the target. Then the planes behind me release when I do. In this way we'll make a wide pattern, and get away from the target faster than by making a double run.

"We have clear weather, climbing for our altitude through a few scattered clouds, and thirty minutes away from the target we reach 30,000 feet and then level off, following the Borneo shore line of Macassar Strait. We're all at battle stations, I fiddling with my bomb sight. Presently we hear the top turret gunner over the interphone.

"Planes! he's calling. 'Formation of planes, right rear, high!' They were coming down at us from 32,000 or 33,000 feet, but from the navigator's compartment I couldn't see them yet.

"Then they peeled off for the attack, concentrating on Robinson's plane. I could hear the gunners calling these plays over the interphones—couldn't see the Zeros myself yet, but I could see their tracers going into the tail of Robinson's plane. Then we turned in on our bomb run, and I'd catch glimpses of the Zeros as they overshot Robinson, some of them coming fifty feet from his plane.

"But I'm busy on my bombing run. I've picked my first live target, a row of three transports, broadside to our line of flight. Everything else seems to be going smoothly. I can hear Charlie Britt on the top turret guns, hammering away at Zeros, and I cuss him a little because it shakes my bomb sight.

"Now we're on the run, coming in on the target, and I've set my drift in the sight, plus our true altitude and true air speed, so I can put those cross hairs on the target.

"Now the pilot and I switch our earphones over to command, so we can listen to any orders Major Robinson wants to give from his lead plane, while the copilot stays on the interphones, so he can pick up what our gunners are doing.

"And in a minute I hear it. Major Robinson is calling.

"Robinson to Flight. I've been badly hit in the tail—having trouble holding the nose of my plane down. I'm turning the formation."

"We had been coming in straight at the coast of Borneo. Now, turning, we go down the coast, the Zeros swarming around us like flies around a hunk of rotten meat.

"The first one I really saw came up from beneath us. I'd known he was there, because tracers had been coming up from under the ship's belly past my face, as if someone down under there was throwing up handfuls of live, smoking coals.

"As he pulls up out from beneath us and banks away, I get in a couple of good bursts at him with the little .30-caliber machine gun we have down there in the nose. I couldn't really see if I'd hit him or not. Then:

"Robinson to Skiles. Go ahead," Skiles answering Robinson, says our pilot.

"Take the lead," Robinson tells him. "I can't keep up with the formation. I'll drop behind. And slow the formation down so I can keep up."

"We're still going down the coast, remember. And now:

"Skiles to Robinson. Go ahead," comes over the interphones.

"Robinson answering Skiles."

"Do you want to make another pass at the target?" asks Skiles.

"Yes, Skiles, take the formation over the target again."

"We make our turn, the rest following, and head back.

"Just then a Zero dives down on the formation from behind, going between me and the plane on our right wing—about a hundred feet away—and then it levels off out in front of me. I happened to have the gun in the right-hand socket of the nose, so I can really lay it on him with my little .30-caliber sewing machine. It's taking plenty of stitches, but I can see my tracers slapping into his wing, close to where it joins his fuselage. He wobbles, goes into a dive. He is well out in front with plenty of forward speed, so it's almost like watching a bomb leaving my plane, which I can follow all the way down. This doesn't happen often. Usually I shoot at them, they go on back behind, and the wing gunners confirm whether I really got them or not. But now:

"Robinson to Flight. Use as your target that heavy cruiser moving out from shore."

Dear Friends:

Well here I am again over here. It is still the same as the last time. It is very nice here and the eats are not too bad.

My wife tells me that you wrote a letter to me and that it came back and that would like for me to send a request for some sweets. Well I don't know of anything that I would like to have better. So I am requesting you to send me some. Thanks. Did your daughter come across yet? I thought that I seen her but could not get a chance to talk to her if it was her.

Well give my regards to all and I will try and write again in the near future, hoping to hear from you soon as letter's will be slow now

The Victory club, group of young people who have done so much to aid the war effort, will conduct a drive for waste paper tomorrow. Paper tied in bundles and deposited at the curb will be picked up by members who will canvass the town with horse and wagon. The paper will be stored at Weisshelberg's shed, and contributors may take paper there at any time. The club plans to construct a sign for the shed to designate its use. At a meeting held Saturday evening at the home of Ruth and Dolores Minger it was announced that more stars have been purchased for the village service flag. Geo. Sangmeister presided at the meeting. The following is quoted from a War Production Bulletin: "The Army fights with paper, literally. Every shell fired comes up to the guns in an individual paper container. The powder that sends it on its way is made largely of paper stock. To make the boxes in which food and ammunition are sent overseas, a half million tons of paper are being used this year, more than half as much as all magazines combined, will use."

Women and Another War

By Gertrude M. Puelicher
—Editor, The Press Woman

Honorable Frances P. Bolton, Congresswoman from Ohio, sets a stirring example for those women whose love of the fundamentals upon which this country was founded is strong enough to galvanize them into constructive action.

The day for armchair oratory is gone. The day for pleasant theorizing is gone. The problems that face us are grimly realistic. They concern themselves not at all with party politics or religious creeds. They concern themselves entirely with the American home and its contribution to a normal, harmonious mode of life founded upon a firmly grounded religious faith; with American boys and girls who in another ten or fifteen years will be shaping the policies, economic, foreign and domestic, of this country; with the future attitudes of lands.

Much of the war effort for which women have been largely responsible has been directed toward salvage. Attention has been concentrated upon fats, tin cans, paper etc.

What about salvaging the American home? What about salvaging the children within that home.

"Juvenile Delinquency" has become a dangerously trite by word. Educators, psychiatrists, social workers and police authorities are struggling with a situation beyond their control, simply because it stems directly from a source beyond their control, namely, the American home. Laws may govern what we eat and how we behave, but what we are is the direct result of what our homes are, and the responsibility for that condition lies primarily with the women of the nation.

Examine our homes today. Where in have they failed to meet the needs of American youth?

According to Mrs. Bolton's remarks made November 30, 1943 in the House of Representatives, "So many homes have become little more than places to hang one's hat when it is convenient. Unfortunately, there has been less and less discipline in the home; there has been less and less allegiance to the church, regardless of creed or religion; there has been less observance of the 'moral virtues', as we used to call them."

If the American home has become a mere hutch, sliding steadily into the discard along with other outmoded institutions, what is the contributing factor to its ignominious exit. Where are the women whose job it is to hold the home together. "In defense plants", you reply promptly, "serving their country". Some of them, yes! Many of them, unfortunately, are serving by a less noble motive, are serving an age old god known by a name other than patriotism.

Granted that women who have seen too little of the better side of life are now succumbing to the lust of material things that only money can buy, does that necessitate an orgy of spending that must eventually revitalize or relief agencies.

Money put into war bonds, and left there to increase in value—money laid aside for educational Americans to the peoples of other purposes—money put into the purchase of a small home—one understands the desires that can actuate such expenditure because they will benefit an entire family.

But does the warmth of a $900 fur coat on a defense worker shut out the cold frightening ache of her neglected fifteen-year-old daughter who is in the hands of the law on a morals charge.

Does a $300 watch, proudly paid for in cold cash, atone for the murder charge against a teen-aged son whose sudden lack of home life has driven him into the thrilling companionship of a gang composed, like himself, of lonely boys.

If there are men in the world who have gone mad over an insane lust for power and have thus forced this holocaust of war upon an entire universe, is that a criterion for women so far to forget the obligations of motherhood as to force an juvenile crime upon an entire nation.

Exactly as the dictators of foreign countries have been gradually increasing their power until the combustion point, so have women in this country gradually been losing control of their homes and children until the combustion point. The result in each case is the same: war and its resulting tragedies.

For years, discipline has been disappearing, not only from our homes but from our schools. Again to quote Congresswoman Bolton: "Lack of discipline has extended itself to the schools. Teachers are no longer permitted to discipline children. Lack of discipline has been projected even into the reformatories, where the directors are not permitted to discipline those who are really in great need of discipline. How in the world can we expect to control juvenile delinquency or any other form of delinquency if we may not discipline. I happen to have disciplined my children, and I believe in it. I believe education should be preparation for life and the living of life. I know, as you do, that life itself is a discipline from start to finish. The unkindest thing that we can do for children is to remove all forms of discipline from them."

Youth is fundamentally good, not bad. Youths problems have been unfairly great because with the characteristic selfishness of maturity, we have not only failed to prepare them to meet squarely the exigencies of life, but we have failed to give them even a spiritual staff upon which to lean. Have we demonstrated so conclusively that life can be lived without God that we dare project our example upon immature youth?

The biggest defense job in the country today, and for all days to come, is motherhood.

Even should it be necessary to draft the women power of the country, the biggest contributing factor in the war effort possible to women would lie in the re-establishment of the American home life upon the firm basis of spiritual strength combined with loyal family affection.

Women have a vital obligation to their country, an obligation to defend their homes against the inroads of hatred, prejudice, intolerance, uncontrolled behavior, loose living and disloyal thinking. The way in which they meet that obligation will determine to a large extent whether another generation of young people is to be sacrificed on the altar of political ambitions in the name of democracy, whether violence and destruction are to rage rampant across nations whose devastated homes and civilian dead are mute witness to the horrors of war.

In all this great organization of press women is there no potent enough to awaken women to their responsibilities as mothers and home makers.

Is there no one dynamic enough to penetrate their apathy, to arouse them to the coldly relentless truth that wars will come again and again until mothers aggressively mold the characters of their children by disciplining them to the need of law and order; by teaching them the folly of hate and the right of each individual to freedom of worship, of speech and of those other freedoms consistent with living in a society of free men; by inculcating in them so strong a love of God, good, that their daily lives become a practical application of their spiritual understanding.

Women have their fingers on the pulse of a nation's policies thru the medium of their children. Women are the builders of a nation thru the medium of their homes. Those children, however, must be guided by intelligence and love whose force is derived from the spiritual. Those homes must be built, not on shifting sand, but on enduring rock.

Wisely tenacious of the power they yield in directing the lives of our youth, women have a moral obligation to maintain their homes.

Hello everyone I'm a little late with this but hope you forgive me. Just a few lines thanking you for the candy and card on my birthday. My irregular schedule gets me going sometimes so much I've forgotten who and when I have written them.

The Christmas box beat the birthday box here by the way. What I had of it was good, very good. But as soon as I opened the box had the rest of the band on my neck. "hounding" me for it. Well I saved my neck and got a piece of candy besides. So everybody was happy. So on behalf of the band and myself, thanks again for my birthday gift.

Bye now, Gordy Osmus

Camp White, Oregon

Dear Friends:

The package of candy arrived on my birthday and I want to thank you all very much for again remembering me. The candy was fine and was thoroughly enjoyed by myself and friends.

Sincerely yours,
Raymond D. Brodsky

Somewhere in the Aleutians

Dear Friends and Parents:
I thank you very much for the swell box of candy. Between some of the fellows and myself we made short of finishing it up.

This place isn't like the States, but we are getting along fine. Right now skiing is very good and some of the boys are already getting good at the sport. They almost get to the bottom of a slope before sitting down to rest.

Good bye for now and thanks again for the candy

Yours very truly,
Bob Tracy

Dear Friends:

I want to thank you for the candy and the paper I have been receiving.

Maybe I should leave you in on a little secret if mother already has not. I got married the 18th of December to a girl here in McCook.

Guess that's all so I'll close with the hope we'll all be home next year at this time.

As ever, Bob Sievert

I talk with lots of interesting people on the telephone and at this desk and try to help everybody get all the service there is.

Yes, I've got a job to do. And it's one that deserves my best.

John H. Brock Accepts Post of Farm Adviser

John H. Brock, Farm Adviser in McHenry County for the past nine years has been elected by the Board of Directors of the Will County Farm Bureau as the new adviser to succeed Mr. Braham. Mr. Brock has accepted the post and will plan to take up his new work in Will County approximately June 15. He is a native of Kankakee County, a graduate of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois in 1926, four years a member of the Dairy Extension Staff at the University of Illinois, and for 4 1/2 years Farm Adviser in Bond County.

During his nine years' experience as Farm Adviser in McHenry County Mr. Brock has won recognition as being one of the outstanding Farm Advisers in the State. Extension work in all of the major projects has greatly increased and the Farm Bureau membership has been more than doubled, so that in every way Mr. Brock comes to Will County well qualified to carry forward the work here.

Mr. Brock married a Will County girl, the former Viola Johnston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Johnston of Wesley Township. He is a brother to Mrs. Phil Goodwin, who with her family live neighbors to the Johnstons in Wesley Township.

Many of the Dairy Herd Improvement Association members will remember "Jack" Brock as the State Specialist in charge of that work in the early thirties. Also the 4H Club members will recognize him as the judge of the Will County Show a short time ago. Extension work in Will County will be in good hands when Mr. Brock arrives in June.

John H. Brock Accepts Post of Farm Adviser

John H. Brock, Farm Adviser in McHenry County for the past nine years has been elected by the Board of Directors of the Will County Farm Bureau as the new adviser to succeed Mr. Braham. Mr. Brock has accepted the post and will plan to take up his new work in Will County approximately June 15. He is a native of Kankakee County, a graduate of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois in 1926, four years a member of the Dairy Extension Staff at the University of Illinois, and for 4 1/2 years Farm Adviser in Bond County.

During his nine years' experience as Farm Adviser in McHenry County Mr. Brock has won recognition as being one of the outstanding Farm Advisers in the State. Extension work in all of the major projects has greatly increased and the Farm Bureau membership has been more than doubled, so that in every way Mr. Brock comes to Will County well qualified to carry forward the work here.

Mr. Brock married a Will County girl, the former Viola Johnston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Johnston of Wesley Township. He is a brother to Mrs. Phil Goodwin, who with her family live neighbors to the Johnstons in Wesley Township.

Many of the Dairy Herd Improvement Association members will remember "Jack" Brock as the State Specialist in charge of that work in the early thirties. Also the 4H Club members will recognize him as the judge of the Will County Show a short time ago. Extension work in Will County will be in good hands when Mr. Brock arrives in June.

War Bonds in the Farmer's Reserve Fund

by O. R. Johnson
Professor of Agricultural Economics
University of Missouri

FAVORABLE seasons, wartime prices, and a lot of hard work as their contribution to the war effort, have brought corn belt farmers three years of record breaking production and income. Every farmer naturally wants to use this income in the best possible way. Recent experiences in insecurity have no doubt impressed us all with the wisdom of using these earnings to increase as much as possible the security of our homes and professions.

Certainly complete or substantial debt repayment or better adapted terms of repayment will contribute to security. Provision for a substantial reserve fund to protect against unusual hazards or as a basis of non-mortgage credit for temporary needs adds to this security. When well handled, this reserve is one of the most useful features of a good farm business. For effective farming, adequate reserves are as useful as modern equipment, and lack of reserves about as serious a handicap as the lack of modern equipment.

Such a reserve should be regarded as a permanent feature of the farm business setup. It will facilitate effective farm business operation year after year.

War Bonds can provide this reserve in a most desirable way. They are as safe as our government itself, earn interest, and can be readily turned into cash if absolutely necessary. Their purchase achieves the additional objective of helping to finance the war.

The present boom in land prices indicates that many farmers, along with city investors, are putting some of their earnings into land. Unless such purchase is completely paid for, a mortgage debt, possibly at inflated values, may jeopardize the security aspect of such procedure. This practice is certainly contributing to a land price boom, which will not prove of help to American agriculture.

Security for the farm family will require some replacement of equipment and some restoration of soil and improvements. Judgment would indicate gradual replacement and restoration because supplies will be limited and costs probably high in the early postwar period. Should our postwar economy resemble that of the past, there will be more favorable times a little later for such replacements and improvements. Dollars will have more purchasing power than in the early postwar period.

Savings carried as War Bonds should, therefore, be regarded as reserves for two purposes, (1) postwar necessary replacements; and, chiefly, (2) continuous reserves to provide for emergency operating needs, just as extra power or feed serve to meet emergency needs.

War Bonds are especially adapted for investment of reserve funds not only because they are secure and can be turned into cash to meet an emergency need, but also because they are constantly earning interest. Reserves carried as cash seldom do this. We will all need to help provide the carrying charges for the public debt when the war is over and the readjustment to peacetime employment is completed. Interest on such a reserve fund will insure the owner that, to this extent, taxes to pay carrying charges on the public debt are not an extra burden.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"The war stories I like best, Judge, are the ones by the special writers overseas who live right with our troops. They give us a better idea of how our men react to things going on over there and back here at home."

"I agree with you, Sam. I never miss one of those stories in the papers or magazines. And there's one thing those writers seem to agree on no matter where they are stationed with our men... and that is that the men who have left their homes and families to go away and fight this war don't want to come back and find that prohibition has been put over on them while they were away... either nationally or locally. They have heard about the attempts being made and they resent it bitterly."

"I agree with them, Judge, even though I don't happen to drink myself. Furthermore, I don't think it's fair for us at home to be making any major changes while 10,000,000 of our fighting men are away and have no chance to express their opinions."

HARRY SALSINGER brought out the point recently that if Ty Cobb had gone out to be a home run hitter, Ty could have more than tripled his four-base output.

I think this is true. But Ty was a place-hit specialist, who merely wanted to get on base and then turn on his speed. Now a close pal of Babe Ruth brings out the point that if the Babe hadn't been built up as a home run hitter, he could have been a .450 average entry, chopping singles over the infield or rapping doubles to wide open spaces in the outfield.

I know the Babe has always felt that way. .450 or better.

"But what good are singles or doubles to me?" Ruth used to say.

"I get four singles and I'm a bum. The mob came out to see me hit one over the fence or strike out. And don't forget I struck out plenty. After I once got started hitting home runs I could have hit 12 home runs a season, batted .500, and still have been a punk. Nobody wanted to see me hit singles or doubles. It was a home run or nothing and I had to go all out for those home runs. That's what I got paid for."

In the same way the crowd wanted to see Ty Cobb on some base, churning up the dust at second or third, or storming into home. Ruth and Cobb were specialists in two entirely different fields.

Leading specialists rarely double in two different acts. When they do they are not specialists.

The Way It Works Out

I was talking about this angle with Jimmy Thomson, the longest driver that golf has ever known. Thomson, now in the coast guard, is powerfully built, around 200 pounds of steel sinew. His range is from 270 yards to 300 yards and with a following wind I've seen him hit greens 340 yards away.

I was playing with Jimmy one day at the Los Angeles Country club, a top championship course, just before the $10,000 L. A. Open. Thomson had a 66, even through a steady rain, which was no California fog. He played well within himself, frequently using a spoon or brassie off the tee.

"Why don't you follow this system in a tournament?" I asked him.

Jimmy merely smiled. "I'm paid," he said, "to hit the ball farther than anyone else in any field. My main living dough comes from big hitting. I like to eat and pay my rent and take care of my family. I give everything I have from every tee. That's where I get most of my publicity. That's what my firm wants."

"Suppose I switched over. You know what the gamble is in trying to outscore such men as Byron Nelson, Sammy Snead, Ben Hogan and some of the others. You've got to beat par 10 or 12 strokes to even have a chance. And then you might lose. But long hitting is my specialty. The crowd doesn't give a rap about seeing me get a birdie. The crowd wants to see me drive 300 yards and hit a 500 yard green with a driver and a 6 iron. I'm pegged as the longest hitter. Horton Smith is pegged as the best putter. They always liked to see Bobby Jones? Well, they liked to see Bobby handle any club he had in the bag. The answer is they liked to see Bobby, no matter what club he used."

This is all true. I saw a tremendous gallery watching Jimmy Thomson playing the famous 520 yard 13th hole in the Augusta National. Most of the stars on hand were trying to hit this green with a drive and a brassie, for there was a guarding ditch in front of the velvet.

Thomson carried the tall and stately pines over 200 yards away and hit the green with a 6 iron. It was an incredible performance. That was the gallery's thrill.

Don Hutson could have been almost anything in football. He could have been a star back—a fine ball carrier. But he happened to be the greatest pass receiver in the long history of football. Why not concentrate on his specialty as Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth and Jim Thomson did?

This is why the sideline or the non-combatant runs into trouble when he begins to rank leading stars. I must admit that I lean towards the specialists, those who can do one thing better than anybody else. They are the true artists.

'Sad' News From Bonura

Corp. Zeke Bonura writes from North Africa—

"Dear Grant—We have just run off an international marathon. Sad news. I am sorry to say the first American that finished was No. 21. He was Lieutenant Tribou, an army officer. The first two runners were Ali Guernoue and Ahmed Belgheem, two Arab soldiers. No. 3 was Maj. D. B. McKenzie of the British army. We seem to be long on speed but short on stamina. These Arabs can run all day."

DESPITE the fact that Warren Wright's Pensive and C. V. Whitney's Pukka Gin are getting the big play in the winter book, this is supposed to be one of the widest of wide-open Kentucky Derbies.

The fact that betters are sold on Pensive and Pukka Gin doesn't mean they are the two best horses in the possible field. But it does reflect a confidence that the two will start—an exceedingly important part of winter book betting.

Most Derbies are considered wide open at this stage. The situation isn't peculiar to 1944. There isn't a sure thing in horse racing.

Not long ago Alex Robb of the Thoroughbred Racing association pointed out that a wide-open Derby occasionally produces a sensational horse. This leaves the experts out on a limb because they failed to recognize the early symptoms of greatness.

One of the most extraordinary examples dates back to 1918. Sun Briar, which had been the champion two-year-old, was withdrawn. Exterminator, purchased as a work horse for the champion, was substituted. The reason was simply that Willis Sharpe Kilmer, an eastern sportsman, wanted to see his colors flying in the Derby. The race made history. Exterminator won the Derby, then went on to become one of the greatest thoroughbreds in history. His prestige was outclassed only by Man o' War.

Two in a Row

The next year's Derby was along the same line. Comdr. J. K. L. Ross started two horses in the race, Sir Barton and Billy Kelly. He placed his confidence in Billy Kelly, but Sir Barton won it, and it was the first race he ever won. Before the year was over Sir Barton was acclaimed as the first triple-crown winner of the turf. He had won the Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont.

Race horses are unpredictable animals. Back in 1922 Morvich completely dominated the pre-Derby dope. The winter book favorite, he had won 11 straight as a two-year-old and far overshadowed the unknown Exterminator and Sir Barton. The Derby ran pretty well to form with Morvich registering an easy win. But that ended Morvich. He never won another race. Nothing in particular seemed to be wrong with him, but he just quit winning races after nabbing 12 in a row.

The odds against winter book favorites are indicated by the fact that only four of them have won the Derby since 1919. They were Morvich, in 1922, Reigh Count in 1928, Gallant Fox in 1930 and Count Fleet in 1943. The other 21 were either beaten or failed to go to the post.

Care of Firearms

Several excellent tips on the care of rifles and shotguns were forthcoming recently from V. J. Tiefenbrunn, firearms expert and ballistic technician of the Western Cartridge company.

Tiefenbrunn had an extra word of caution for farmers and ranchers. Farm-owned rifles and shotguns that are kept ready for quick shots at predators should always be kept clean and coated with a light oil. As lighter oils drain off and have a tendency to evaporate, they should be renewed periodically. And it is a mistake to plug the barrel to keep out dirt. This practice can produce atmospheric rusting due to the condensation of moisture on exterior metal parts or in the barrel. Also, many accidents have resulted from plugged guns—the plugs forgotten.

If the gun is to be stored for the summer he advises the following steps:

First, clean the bore of the gun thoroughly, using a bristle brass brush, clean patches and a reputable powder solvent if necessary.

Heavy Grease Coat

When the bore is clean and dry, coat it thoroughly with grease. As long as the gun is to be stored, use heavy grease or heavy gun oil. Heavy lubricant is better protection against atmospheric rusting. All exposed metal parts should be wiped with a clean cloth saturated with the same type grease.

After the gun has been greased, be sure to snap the trigger before storing it. Never plug the muzzle. Best storage conditions are at ordinary room temperature. Avoid basements, barns, attics or other places subject to damp or extreme temperature changes.

The best way to remove the lubricant at the beginning of the next shooting season is to apply a little elbow grease and swab the inside with clean patches and wipe the outside with a dry rag. Don't shoot until the grease is removed.

"Your gun, like any mechanical device, needs reasonable care and attention to insure its positive and continued operation," says Mr. Tiefenbrunn. "With no new guns in sight, and long periods when farmers as well as hunters must do without ammunition, a little extra care is required today."

Sprouted Grain Is Source of Vitamin A

Wheat or Oat Shoots Will Supply Poultry

If you are having a hard time buying enough feeding oils, alfalfa meal and yellow corn for your poultry laying flock, Dr. M. W. Taylor, associate biochemist in nutrition at Rutgers university, suggests you try sprouted grains to supply that essential vitamin A.

Through his research Dr. Taylor has found that sprouted wheat or oats grown in flat trays for about two weeks, with exposure to sunlight to promote greenness, is a fairly good source of carotene or provitamin A.

"At least, it is a good source to use when natural grass range or silage is not available," he says. "A potency of 5,000 U.S.P. units per pound of fresh seedlings may easily be obtained and, as many poultrymen already know, this material is readily consumed by hens. Fed at the rate of 5 pounds per 100 hens per day, the seedlings will furnish about one-third the recommended amount of vitamin A which is enough to prevent a serious deficiency."

Spread Grain in Trays.

For poultrymen who have never sprouted grains before, Dr. Taylor outlines the procedure:

"Oats or wheat are your best choice, since they sprout easily, grow fairly quick and are usually available. Soak them overnight to promote rapid sprouting. Next, spread them out in one-fourth inch layers in flat trays with two or three sheets of newspapers in the bottom so the trays hold moisture around the roots. The thickness is important. If too thick, the seedlings will not develop sufficient green color. If too thin, the roots will be exposed to too much air and light."

"Keep the tray moist by sprinkling once or twice daily with water containing chloride of lime at the rate of a heaping teaspoonful to a pail (three gallons) of water. The chloride of lime will keep down mold growth."

"For the first two or three days, or until sprouting is definitely noticed, keep the tray in subdued light. After this, place it near a sunny window so it will receive as much light as possible. The stronger the light the higher the vitamin A content. Slow growth in a cool room is better than rapid growth at high temperatures."

The one drawback of sprouted grains is the space required to grow them. However, Dr. Taylor estimates that a total of 10 square feet of sprouting area, divided in three parts and used in rotation, will produce from 1 to 2½ pounds of seedlings daily, or enough for 20 to 50 hens.

U.S.D.A. Has 4,000 Strains Of Barley in Collection

A collection of about 4,000 established varieties and strains of barleys from all over the world is maintained by the U. S. department of agriculture to facilitate the breeding of better barleys for different parts of the country. The only larger collection is reported in Russia. Typical of the work of government cereal specialists and barley breeders is the experiment now going on to develop new varieties of barley resistant to the green bug or aphid, which in 1942 caused a loss of more than $3,000,000 in Texas and Oklahoma barley fields.

Phenothiazine Expels

Many Intestinal Parasites

Phenothiazine is today the most widely used of all drugs for the removal of internal parasites of farm animals. In less than five years this synthetic coal-tar derivative has proved the effectiveness of its anthelmintic action against most of the economically important stomach and intestinal roundworms. It is used for many kinds of livestock and is extremely effective.

WHAT 'ECONOMIC CIRCLE' MEANS TO AMERICA

THE FARMER wants and insists upon more for his crops. He wants higher prices for his wheat, corn, cotton, fruits, hogs, cattle and everything he produces. When he gets the more he asks for, who pays? The consumer.

The worker demands higher wages and less hours of work. When his demands are met and his wages increased, who pays? The consumer. Because of higher material costs and higher wages the processor of farm products increases his price for flour, bread, beefsteaks, bacon and other things. Who pays the increased prices? The consumer.

Because of higher wages in his own plant and a higher cost of steel, wood, cotton, wool and other materials he must have caused by higher wages in the production of these materials, the manufacturer marks up the price of his product. Who pays for that increase? The consumer.

The merchant pays more for the commodities he sells. He pays more rent, more wages to his clerks, renders more service at the demands of his customers. Like the farmer, the worker, the processor, the manufacturer, his taxes are higher. Who pays for the higher mark ups on his merchandise? The consumer.

Yes, the consumer pays all the bill, all along the line, but who is the consumer? He is the farmer, the worker, the processor, manufacturer and merchant. He is each and everyone of us. We are paying for what we get.

It is but a circle, though not a vicious circle, as some would have us believe. There are some attempted abuses, some attempts to get some advantage without paying. They seldom, if ever, work, or at least not for long. It is all but a part of what we term the American way of life. Through its operations America has attained the highest living standards ever known in the history of the world. It has meant better homes, automobiles, radios, electric utensils, telephones and other things hardly known by the common people of other lands. It means opportunity for those with ability, energy, ambition. It is the privilege of a free people to advance, a privilege they could not enjoy under any system of state socialism.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES AND POLITICS

THROUGHOUT OUR HISTORY as a nation we have had emergencies that have called for national action. In the past such needed action has been initiated at Washington and passed on to the states to be handled by the state and local governments.

In the majority of cases that system has been followed in the present war emergency when it meant unpaid jobs. Civilian defense is one of the examples. Civilian defense officials were unpaid and were named by authority of the governor of a state or through him by the mayor of a town or city.

In bureaus calling for paid employees they have been named and paid from Washington. They have no allegiance or responsibility to the states. It is such jobs that constitute the larger portions of the hundreds of thousands of federal civilian employees now distributed throughout all states. As a sample, 283,000 such employees are in New York state, 235,000 in California, and every state has a proportionate number. What may be the political significance, if any, in this change in methods?

JOB HOLDERS IN A DEMOCRACY

THE GOVERNMENT of the Republic is built upon a free election system, the right of each qualified voter to vote for the men and measures he believes best for the nation. Neither the Democratic nor Republican party, as such, would approve or countenance anything that could be considered a menace to our free election system. What can three million federal civilian employees, scattered throughout the states, do to that free election system? Quite naturally they, their relatives and friends, could be expected to vote for those who provided the jobs. That is a partisan advantage of patronage. The three million job holders can be expected to produce 12 million or more votes for the job providers. Twelve million votes is approximately one-third of the total that will be cast in a national election.

"You must," said a voice over the radio; "you must," the voice repeated; "you must," the voice demanded. Three "musts" in one brief half minute statement made by a Washington bureaucrat to free-born Americans. He was not telling us to obey a law but to heed a bureaucratic edict. Three "will you's" would have been more appreciated and more effective. The free American does not like "must."

WHAT YOU DO TODAY you will not have to do tomorrow.

Trigger Fish

The trigger fish has a trick fin that can be locked into place to prevent dislodgment when the fish wedges itself in a rocky crevice.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The importance of the tire conservation program, effected in 1942, will be appreciated when it is known that the number of passenger car tires rationed and those sold on new cars in 1942 only equalled 8.3 per cent of the passenger car tires shipped for all purposes in 1941.

Neglected small tire tread cuts and bruises can become serious rubber wasters. A small cut, even though it does not go entirely through the fabric, lets in dirt, water and foreign matter. Constant flexing increases the size of the cut until the tire is beyond repair. Prompt repair is a patriotic duty these days.
